

As these people are already slightly shifted, very little is needed to make them shift even more, which makes them very vulnerable and sensitive to nuisance, especially during emotional stress. They are in energy patterns which are not easily released, related to the experiences of early childhood or adolescence. Conflicts between the parents during this period are often the cause of this sensitivity. They also reflect an internal conflict between the male and female. Working to release this emotion (memory in the body) is essential in order to regain alignment.

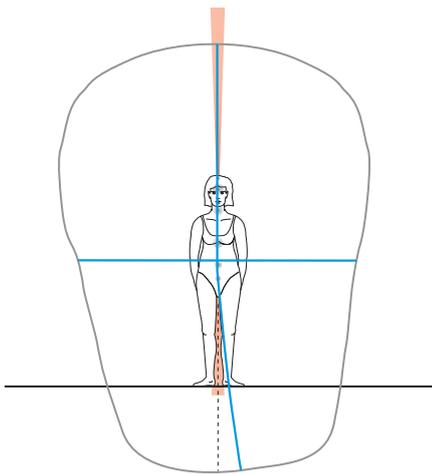

The vertical plane is also the « way of life ». Thus, shifted people often miss what they should live for or focus on in order to progress in their existence. The denial of the incarnation -always saying: life is too hard, life is suffering - and taking escape in mental illusions, to avoid or control emotions are typical of misalignment of that axis.

A big shock like the loss of a loved one or an accident can create a permanent shift in the whole length. By putting back in alignment the vertical axis using our hands, we can maintain it sustainably and prevent the person from remaining « à côté de ses pompes » - literally « beside themselves ». The correction changes the inner perceptions and even has a bearing on events (events change because the person has changed their bioenergetic profile).

Permanent offset of the diagonal axis

We still need to consider the diagonal axis shift or offset to the left or right. In general, the cause here is physical, often a serious illness (cancer, autoimmune disease, etc.). Or the origin may lie in the more subtle planes, frequently linked to an entity that's big enough to be a systemic parasite to the vital field and the chakras. Shifted or offset diagonal axes have different symptoms: heavy legs, nausea, general ill-being, headaches, anxiety, dizziness, various pains on one side. Unfortunately, it is difficult to permanently fix the axis of these people.

When the axis is displaced downward:

- Poor relationship with the mother or earth
- difficulty to incarnate
- hard life, everything is complicated
- little contact with nature
- escapist/ tends to flee reality
- uprooted, lack of feeling rooted
- often this is an inherited condition
- feeling displaced and not at home anywhere

When the axis is displaced upward:

- too mental
- head and heart are in disagreement
- head and body are in disagreement
- agitated by unsorted thoughts
- wants to control everything

When the axis is displaced along the entire height:

- too sensitive
- emotionally unstable
- quickly destabilized psychologically
- fears and anxieties
- misses what is good for him/her
- has suffered emotional shocks

When the diagonal axes are displaced:

- serious illness
- possessed by an entity
- significant psychological issues
- « beside themselves »
- subject to vertigo, balance problems
- clumsy, maladroit

Resistance to shifts

The energetic body does not like to be displaced, it will do everything to restore the alignment and centering. When there is a momentary misalignment, which may decrease over time, the body attempts to minimize the impact of etheric disturbance. That can include a complete correction without mental involvement or intervention. Allowing relaxed intuition to adjust your axes and their alignments increases the subtlety and sensitivity of perception.

The vital field reacts to new stimuli, to eventually get used to it. We are sensitive to changes in energy and new information that enters our field. If you hold a rock crystal, your plane immediately rises by twenty centimeters. But with this crystal on you all day, the plane eventually goes down to the navel. We get used to what we wear, all these « gris-gris » - (protection amulets), eventually no longer have any effect when we wear them continuously, without conscience. The ideal is to integrate their information in order not to be dependent on them.

Everyone can deal with displaced axes and misalignments within certain limits. According to one's bioenergetic profile and axial mobility, axes which exceed these limits cause problems. If for any reason these limits are crossed, there will be significant physical consequences such as loss of balance, blurred vision, heart disease, loss of consciousness, etc.

The vital field and axial offsets are generally proportional to physical disturbance (a linear correlation), but for very high values, the etheric or aura energy field reaction becomes less and eventually reaches a limit value. Extreme values were tested and observed 10 cm below the feet, 30 cm above the head for the horizontal plane, 25 cm left to the vertical plane, 25 cm behind the lateral plane.

Some products such as the Rescue remedy (a mixture of Bach flowers) help to re-center/realign the axes after emotional disturbance.

Reaction of the vital field

By measuring thousands of different phenomena, we found many discrepancies. If the vital field reacts, it has a reason to do so. Take for example a product the body does not appreciate. Immediately the vital field decreases as if the body wanted to keep or concentrate energy, to protect itself against it. When someone is sick, the vital field reacts exactly the same way: the energy is reinforced around the organs that are doing poorly, thus kept within rather than being dispersed outside. Moreover, it also influences the behavior of the patient who tends to stay inside, even under the duvet (blanket). The terms « reclusive » or « radiant » express a subtle aspect of the human being, due to compression or expansion of the vital field.

Molecular Chirality and vertical axis

The human body, like any living being, is composed solely of molecules of type L (L = levorotation or counterclockwise). This means these molecules diluted in water polarize a beam of light into left-handed helicity. Molecules form life from the way they propagate light, and not just from the shape of the molecule (the molecules turn neither left neither right). However, the geometry of L molecules is different from D molecules (D = dextrorotation or clockwise). An L molecule is the mirror image of a D molecule, as are our two hands. This phenomenon is called « chirality ». This asymmetry implies that the information captured by the body creates more shift or displacement of the vertical plane towards the left than towards right. If we place a product with L molecules on a person's chest, the vertical axis does not move. However, if the product is composed of D molecules, it shifts to the left. We have done enough blind tests to say that D substances always shift the axis to the left, as they are not compatible with the chemistry of the human body. If one consumes D molecules, the body will reject them. Almost all synthetic products (vitamins, medicines, plastics) are composed of as many D as L molecules (as opposed to naturally grown materials which will have the more life affirming dominance of L chiral molecules).

The body uses up inappropriate energy to eliminate D molecules. However, in a natural product, created by biology, the molecules are bound to be of type L. A natural vitamin is twice as effective as synthetic vitamin largely for this reason. For analogous reasons of disagreeing handedness or chirality (technically: an enantiomorphism), whenever something does not suit the body, the vertical plane is shifted to the left. As the vital field is related to the offsets or deflections of the vertical axis, this implies lower or even negative bioenergetic values, from synthetic products or even foods sprayed with chemicals (fertilizers, pesticides, fungicides)...

Electromagnetic fields and vertical axis

The natural electromagnetic fields which the human being has been immersed in since primeval Earth do not seem to create a particular shift. The atmosphere seems to filter what could affect us, at least until measurable limits. However, it is not the same with artificial fields created by humans. Almost all artificial fields shift the vertical axis to the left except the direct (DC) fields. Alternating (AC) fields shift the axis a little, pulsed fields (square waves) a lot. We cannot explain it but, by analogy with our inner feelings or perceptions, we conclude that if the artificial electromagnetic fields shift to the left and decrease the vital field it is because they are harmful to living organisms. (Dan: square wave harmonic series and most synthetic power sources are opposite to phase conjugate and therefore life denying by preventing efficient or fractal charge distribution.)

Subsoil geomagnetic disturbances and the vertical axis

Each time the energies of sub-soil are disturbed by a fault or a discontinuity, the effect is felt on the surface by a shift of the human vertical axis of the aura to the left and a decrease in the vital field.

A homogeneous sub-soil has a stratigraphy made of nominally regular layers in thickness, with no change of materials in a single layer and no cracks or gaps between layers. The homogeneity of the sub-soil ensures a steady flow (of charge) from bottom to top.

Conversely, other factors may disrupt this flow: the masses of different densities, pipes, voids, flow of underground water, etc. When we measure geophysical anomalies with equipment such as geomagnetometer, we find proportion between the disruption of the vital field and the physical values measured. The composition of the sub-soil (rock and land type, humidity, etc.) has indeed an influence on human beings but it is the non-homogeneity of the sub-soil that causes health problems for those who sleep or live in line with these underground-disturbed areas. (In the same way that the voltage created between different metals can cause pain in your teeth).

The emotional and the vertical axis

Each time we are disturbed by so-called « negative » emotions, we notice that the vital field decreases and the vertical axis (of the vital field) is shifted to the left. The issue is not so much to do with the position of the heart, but certainly with a biochemical or quantum (field) phenomenon. When someone radiates a negative emotion, this emotion may not be so easily measurable in itself, but will influence the people around. This effect is measurable through electrical and biochemical reactions.

A person who expresses anger may, by resonance, awaken latent anger in us. From that moment, our vital field decreases and the vertical axis shifts to the left. It is our anger that becomes measurable by its effect on the vital field. Fear and anger engendered by guilt and frustration are the main emotions that temporarily disrupt or sometimes damage the vital field for a long time.

« Being aware of the world »

Substances, electromagnetic fields, pollution of the subsoil and emotions are the four main types of etheric field nuisances. Even if we do not know why the vital field and its axis vary constantly to inform the body, by measuring these changes, we bring to consciousness what the body picks up subconsciously. It is a way of becoming more aware of this relationship with the world and more autonomous in our life choices.

Symbolism of the horizontal plane

If the vertical plane represents what we like and dislike, the horizontal plane represents the vibrational aspect of the world. Through DNA (piezoelectric braiding), we capture different electromagnetic frequencies and sounds, which will then affect our internal chemistry. This is also true at subtler levels. Vibrations are captured by the chakras in specific frequency spectra. Chakras in the upper body will pick up the highest vibrations and the lower chakras the lowest frequencies, like the low harmonics felt in the belly. High-pitched sounds are felt most in the head. Everything that is « low » will act mainly on the chakras 1 to 3 and cause a reduction in the horizontal plane below the navel. In contrast, what is « high » vibration will elevate this horizontal plane.

By measuring the height of this horizontal plane of the vital field, we use our energetic body as a vibration tuner. This works both physically and in terms more subtle. On page 37, you will find the corresponding symbolism indicated by the offsets or deflection in the horizontal plane. This has useful application for interpreting the way personal and collective memories are inscribed in us. If we believe that heaven and the angels are upstairs and Hell and the demons at the bottom, then, looking at a drawing of an angel, our horizontal plane is going to rise, whereas if we focus on Hell it goes down. This collective transpersonal memory is so imbued in us that it largely pre-determines our mental patterns, which elevate or lower our very being.

Use of these axes in geobiology

In geobiology, this system is very convenient to find cosmotelluric and geologic phenomena without resorting to any other means (rods or measuring instruments). Anything that is « cosmic » raises the horizontal plane; all that is « telluric » lowers it. Geological disturbances, coming from the ground, trigger the lower chakras to activate and thus preserve the individual energetically and correspondingly lower the horizontal plane.

Exercise

The purpose of this exercise is to make you feel how the body recognizes a vibration. If you want to experiment with electromagnetic colors, get yourself a blindfold for the eyes, color filters (colored plastic transparencies) and a powerful flashlight. If you prefer to work only in the etheric, you do not need this equipment. For this exercise, it takes two, one projecting the color and the other guessing, eyes closed. Stand blindfolded if you use the lamp and filters, or simply close your eyes. The other person chooses a filter, and tells you the color and then shines this color onto you, with the light source about 2 meters from you. Feel for your horizontal plane with your left hand. Repeat with 2 or 4 different colors so you can calibrate yourself. Without filter or lamp, ask the other person to imagine a color and project it toward you with the palm of his/her hand. You will see that the color changes your horizontal plane downward in response to the orange-red and upward responding to the blue-violet. Once you are calibrated, try testing a series of 5 colors in a row. As always, this type of exercise helps you to relax into a more sensitive feeling mode rather than a purely mental analyzing. Just feel your axis. Often the first trial (first impulse) is good. Try to do one scan from top to bottom fairly quickly; it is more effective than going too slowly. With practice, you will see the first scan helps locate the approximate height and then a second slower scan, can find the axis with precision. If your mind interferes, you will begin to doubt and be confused, and thus inaccurately finding your plane at several different places. If the proposed color is blue and you think it's green, then you'll find « green ». If the results become inconsistent, rest and start again.

Spatio-temporal symbolism of the vital field

In Paris, one day, there was an exhibition on abyssal creatures. On the poster was a fish from a deep seabed, particularly scary. We all noticed by watching it, our vital field vertical axis shifting more or less to the left, depending on the sensitivity of each one. This experience raised some questions, especially on the notions of beauty and ugliness. Why do we consider this creature as ugly yet find beautiful a butterfly? If we consider all living creatures as perfect, why this judgment?

In seeking a little more in that direction, I found that the judgment (beautiful vs. ugly) depends on the mental images, associated with personal experience and collective memory. Is the ugliness that scares us, and the fear that goes with it caused only by the mind? If this fear is registered at the cellular level, in the depths of the body, placing a picture of an abyssal creature on the chest would then cause similar reactions as the view of the picture with the eyes.

« Negative » Symbols

I have therefore correlated evidence for a correspondence between the bioenergetic reactions and the symbolic:

Negative symbols shift the horizontal plane downward, the vertical to the left and make sub-layers denser. These symbols:

- come from the depths (under sea or Earth)
- are regarded as ugly
- live in the dark
- have a snake tail
- are dark or dull

« Positive » symbols

By contrast in the presence of positive symbols, the horizontal plane goes up, the vertical plane generally remains stable, while the sub-layers expand. In summary positive symbols trigger the vital field to increase. Often these symbols:

- come from the heights (above Earth or sky)
- are regarded as beautiful
- live in the light

- have wings
- are white or bright or light colored

Symbolic attributes

That is why we tend to imagine a demonic creature as black and grimacing, reclusive (« not shareable »), with a tail of a snake, a forked tongue and living underground. While an angel is white, radiating bright colors, with a beautiful smile (« very shareable »), outspread wings and living in the clouds. It is important to understand what image in principle these entities project.

Symbolic correspondence

The following page includes the symbolic correspondences of the vital field. Depending on size, up or down, front or rear, there is a cross reference to the elements listed on the drawing.

The shift of the horizontal plane is also related to this symbolism. The plane rises above the navel if the person is in rapport with the symbol being tested.

On the vertical plane, its shift to the left is almost always connected to an excess or a problem with the feminine side. Note that the left / right symbolism does not depend on gender.

Position or location of the vital field disturbance

These patterns are also related to understanding the symbolisms associated with disruption of the vital field, as they are described in Chapter 4.

For example, an astral parasite on the back is linked to a past event that injured a person's being (often a back wound for example), tending to hold him/her in regret or guilt buried in the subconscious.

In the case of an astral cyst located on the front, there is always a relationship with people in the immediate circle of the cyst holder and it prevents them from advancing in life.
